

IN-TEXT CITATIONS

Formatting In-Text Citations

Whenever you quote lines or paraphrase ideas from outside sources of information, you need to cite and format the sources within a parenthetical reference.

- Cite your source of information in parentheses at the end of your sentence.
- Add the end punctuation (period or question mark) after your citation.

This information will allow your reader to find the full citation of your source in your works cited page at the end of your essay.

In-Text Examples:

If you do not identify the author of your quotation, include his name and the page number in parentheses. Do not use a punctuation mark between the author's name and the page number.

Nearly all forms of public discourse have been reduced to entertainment: "Americans no long talk to each other; they entertain each other. They do not exchange ideas. They exchange images" (Postman 92-93).

If you identify the author of the quotation in your own sentence, include only the page number in parentheses.

According to Postman, nearly all forms of public discourse have been reduced to entertainment: "Americans no long talk to each other; they entertain each other. They do not exchange ideas. They exchange images" (92-93).

The same rules apply for paraphrasing information from an outside source.

Postman argues that entertaining images distract us from intellectual engagement (92-93).

In-Text Example Without an Author or Page Number:

When a source of information does not include an author's name, use the title of the article in your parentheses. If the title is long, use a shortened version. When a source of information does not include a page number, which is common for many websites, the author's name or the title of the article is sufficient.

The alliances between European countries forecasted their involvement in the First World War: "The consequences of these alliances and treaties meant that if one country or power bloc went to war, the others would likely go to war too" ("Introduction").

In-Text Example for Poetry:

To format a short quotation from a poem (no more than three lines of verse) in your text, separate the lines of verse with a forward slash and conclude with the line numbers in parentheses.

Theodore Roethke describes dancing with his drunken father as a rough encounter: "The whiskey on your breath / Could make a small boy dizzy / But I hung on like death" (1-3).

BLOCK QUOTATIONS

Block or offset a quotation from your paragraph when quoting four or more complete lines of a verse or four or more lines of typed text.

Begin the quotation on a new line after your sentence. Indent the quotation ten spaces from the left margin and double-space.

Because a block quotation is off-set from your paragraph, you do not need quotation marks.

Poetry Example:

In his poem, "Mending Wall," Frost observes that nature resists man-made walls:

Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it,
And spills the upper boulders in the sun;
And makes gaps even two can pass abreast.

(1-4)

Prose Example:

Thomas King argues that myth and fiction have distorted the accurate account of Aboriginal history:

As a series of entertainments, Native history is an imaginative cobbling together of fears and loathing, romances and reverences, facts and fantasies into a cycle of creative performances, in Technicolor and 3D, with accompanying soft drinks, candy, and pop corn. In the end, who really needs the whole Native history when we can watch the movie? (20).

QUOTATIONS AND PUNCTUATION

Comma

Introduce a quotation with a comma after a tag, a brief introductory phrase, or a dependent clause.

In his poem, “Mending Wall,” Frost wonders, “Before I built a wall I’d ask to know / What I was walling in or walling out” (32-33).

Colon

Introduce a quotation with a colon after an independent clause.

In his poem, “Mending Wall,” Frost questions the building of barriers: “Before I built a wall I’d ask to know / What I was walling in or walling out” (32-33).

No Punctuation

If a quotation fits easily into the grammar of your sentence, do not insert a comma or colon before it.

Lynne Truss defines punctuation as “a courtesy designed to help readers understand a story without stumbling” (7).

Capitalization

Capitalize the first letter of a quotation when the quoted material is a complete sentence.

Professor Nass warns us that “Multitasking could essentially be dumbing down the world” (“Digital Nation”).

ALTERING QUOTATIONS

Ellipsis

For the sake of conciseness, you may eliminate some words from an original quotation by using ellipsis.

The word ellipsis means the omission of one or more words. To designate an ellipsis within a sentence, include three dots with a single space before, between, and after each dot (. . .). If you have omitted an entire sentence within your quotation, include four dots (. . . .).

Original Quotation:

Thomas King argues that “most Canadians, like most Americans, have a shockingly poor grasp of their own history. Dates, people, the large and small nuances of events have all been reduced to the form and content of Classic Comics” (11).

Quotation with Deleted Words (Ellipsis)

Thomas King argues that “most Canadians . . . have a shockingly poor grasp of their own history. Dates, people, the large and small nuances of events have all been reduced to the form and content of Classic Comics” (11).

Important Note: Do not begin or end a quotation with ellipsis.

Incorrect: A history on Canada’s involvement in Afghanistan will “. . . detail the fighting, the hunkering down, and the long, slow departure from disappointment abroad to victory at home . . .” (Simpson).

Correct: A history on Canada’s involvement in Afghanistan will “detail the fighting, the hunkering down, and the long, slow departure from disappointment abroad to victory at home” (Simpson).

Square Brackets

For the sake of clarity, you may add to or alter some words from an original quotation. Enclose the additions or alterations in square brackets.

In his first soliloquy, Hamlet remembers that his mother “would hang on [Hamlet Senior] / As if increase of appetite had grown / By what it fed on” (1.2.143-45).
